

An Index to Digging Into History

Garry Law, Auckland

2008

Archaeology in New Zealand special issue 47(4) of 2004 contained a series of nostalgic and historical papers about the first 50 years of the Archaeological Association, the volume entitled, Digging Into History.

The volume was edited by Matthew Campbell and we owe him a great deal for this achievement of coercion and editing.

This index to people and sites in the volume was created to enhance its historical value.

I have indexed contributing authors once only to their piece - rendered (Author) rather than every self-reference within it. I have indexed people where they appear in primary historical context but not as referenced authors writing about some aspect at a later date. I have indexed research areas as well as sites. I have not indexed the sites in Helen Leach's great list of conference field-trips as the trips were not primarily research driven. I have been selective about references to distinguished academic forebears, looking for a direct connection to let them in. I have not indexed the photo captions as to the people pictured but I have indexed the photos as sites where they depict sites. The figures list in the volume includes all the identified people. I have not indexed people thanked in "Acknowledgements" sections explicit or otherwise.

In keeping with the intimate character of the volume people are mostly indexed with their First names of everyday use. In a few cases I have added these where I know them but for some people who seemingly were always referred to by title or by their initials I have retained that form from the original references. Given an option of a diminutive I have tried to follow what seems to be most common in the references, or failing that my memory.

The original mostly lacked site numbers – this does too.

Any errors of transcription are mine. One advantage of electronic publication is I can make corrections – email me: glaw@lawas.co.nz
